Governor's remarks on release of Xi Yang

* * * * *

The following is issued on behalf of the Governor, the Rt Hon Christopher Patten:

" I am delighted at the news that Mr Xi Yang has been released from prison and is now back in Hong Kong. His case has caused great anxiety and concern to his family, his colleagues and the whole community. His release is very good news for Hong Kong as we approach the Chinese New Year."

In response to media enquiries about the meeting of the provisional "legislature" in Shenzhen today, the Governor, the Rt Hon Christopher Patten said:

"This was a bad day for Hong Kong. The organisation that met over the border in Shenzhen has no legitimacy, no credibility and no authority in Hong Kong. I hope it will not embarrass Hong Kong too much."

Governor's transcript

The following is the transcript of the remarks made by the Governor, the Rt Hon Christopher Patten, after visiting the fire scene in Tsim Sha Tsui this (Saturday) morning:

Governor: This is another dreadful accident. As you know there are at least fifteen deaths, a number of injuries. I'd like to offer my condolences to the families of the young victims. Their sufferings today is, for all of us who are parents, I am sure almost literally unimaginable. I'd like to thank the Fire Services for reacting so rapidly to this incident, surrounding which, as you know already, there are certainly suspicious circumstances. I am going to the hospitals to see some of the families and to thank the medical staff. There'll be a press conference given by the Secretary for Security and other officials at 12 noon, by which time I hope we will have found out a little more about this dreadful incident. Obviously, we'll spare no effort to find out exactly what the causes of the fire were. But for the time being, I think every one in Hong Kong will want to join me in offering their thoughts and prayers to families of the bereaved.

Transcript of Governor's media session

* * * * *

The following is the transcript of a media session given by the Governor, the Rt Hon Christopher Patten, after seeing family members of the Tsim Sha Tsui fire victims at the Queen Elizabeth Hospital this (Saturday) morning :

Governor: "I have made a statement earlier at the scene of the accident and I'll repeat what I said then. I think the whole community will be shocked by this further dreadful accident and I know that everyone will want to join me in offering our condolences and thoughts and prayers to the families and friends of all those who lost their lives. It's a terrible tragedy and our thoughts obviously go first to those bereaved. I want to thank the Fire Services for reacting so swiftly to this incident which is now being investigated by the police because I think you know there seems to be an extremely suspicious circumstances. Peter Lai, the Secretary for Security will be holding a press conference at 12 o'clock with other officials by which time we should know, perhaps a little more, about exactly what has happened. I've been to both the hospitals which have to cope once again with this sort of fire disaster and as ever they coped with great professionalism and sensitivity. It's a dreadful business and they handled it extremely well. Thank you very much.

SWD personnel assists fire victims

* * * * *

The Director of Social Welfare, Mr Andrew Leung Kin-pong, visited the Queen Elizabeth Hospital (QEH) earlier today (Saturday) to express concern to victims and family members affected by the Tsim Sha Tsui fire.

Medical social workers at QEH are now liaising closely with their counterparts at Kwong Wah Hospital to assist those admitted to the hospitals and to follow up with the families.

Departmental clinical psychologists have been deployed at both hospitals to provide counselling services to victims and distressed family members.

Meanwhile, SWD personnel will reach out to the family members of those deceased and those discharged from hospitals.

Appropriate assistance, such as financial aid in terms of burial grants, charitable funds and Comprehensive Social Security Allowances, child care arrangements and counselling, will be offered when necessary.

Affected family members who want to enquire about information of the victims and related welfare services may contact the Medical Social Work Unit of QEH on telephone 2958 7078, which will be manned round-the-clock today.

Tsim Sha Tsui fire roundup

* * * * *

Thirteen persons who were either overcome by smoke or sustained burn injuries in a No. 3 alarm fire in Tsim Sha Tsui early this (Saturday) morning are still being treated in hospitals.

The fire, which gutted a karaoke club and claimed 15 lives, has been classified as arson and is being investigated by the police.

Various government departments, including the Social Welfare Department, the Home Affairs Department and the Labour Department, have made concerted efforts to take remedial measures to assist the fire victims and their families.

On the part of the Social Welfare Department and the Home Affairs Department, social workers and HAD liaison officers are now keeping close contacts with the management of the hospitals to assist those admitted. Affected family members who want to enquire about information of the victims and related welfare services may contact the Medical Social Work Unit at the Queen Elizabeth Hospital on 2958 7078. Officers of the two departments will also reach out to the family members of those killed in the fire.

The Labour Department has set up two hotlines - 2852 4029 (during office hours) and 9432 9829 (outside office hours) - for family members and relatives of the employees of the club who were injured or killed in the tragedy.

The Kwong Wah Hospital has also set up a hotline- 2781 5220 - to answer enquiries from members of the public on the fire victims up to 9 pm today (Saturday). Public enquiries on the case after 9 pm can be forwarded to telephone 2332 2311 extension 1202.

The fire broke out on the staircase of the first floor of a building at 6-8 Prat Avenue, Tsim Sha Tsui at 3.59 am and spreaded rapidly to the second to the fourth floors which were occupied by a karaoke club. The blaze was upgraded to No. 3 alarm at 4. 07 am.

By using four jets and one hydraulic platform monitor as well as mobilising eight breathing apparatus teams, firemen put out the blaze at 5:22 am. A total of 42 persons who were stranded in the building were rescued by firemen.

Of the rescued, 28 were injured and taken to hospitals where five males and 10 females were certified dead before arrival. The remaining 13 injured persons, aged between 16 and 24, are admitted to the Queen Elizabeth Hospital, Kwong Wah Hospital and Princes Wales Hospital respectively where a 24-year-old man and a 16-year-old girl are in critical condition while the others are either in stable or satisfactory condition.

Initial investigation revealed that the blaze appeared to have been occurred deliberately because it had flared up on the staircase of the first-floor of the building and spreaded rapidly to the upper floors.

Investigation by the police is still underway.

The Governor's "Letter to Hong Kong"

* * * * *

Following is the text of the Governor, the Rt Hon Christopher Patten's broadcast on RTHK's "Letter to Hong Kong" this (Sunday) morning:

When things periodically appear to go wrong in Hong Kong, when, for example, Chinese officials do or say things which seem to threaten aspects of our way of life, I am invariably asked "What are you going to do about it?".

Now that is a fair question. I am responsible for the government of Hong Kong until 30th June this year, and a fundamental part of that responsibility is to try to put in place secure foundations for Hong Kong's stability and way of life. I think we can reasonably say that Hong Kong is very well placed today. The economy is humming. Crime is down. Our institutions work incredibly well. The question marks about the future aren't, alas, related to anything people think that my Administration is going to do before the middle of the year. I say, alas, because if that was the only problem we could easily sort it out.

But there's another point that we shouldn't lose sight of, and that is that there's plenty that people in Hong Kong can do as well. We are not simply limp victims of other peoples' decisions.

Let's take for example the worries that have been understandably raised by the announcement from a Preparatory Committee group that part of Hong Kong's defences of our civil liberties should be struck down. Who can do anything about that? Well, the people who helped to create those defences in the first place are well placed to act. Especially since some of them have opted to join the provisional legislature which China has decided to set up in the face of local and international criticism and condemnation.

Now I happen to think that giving this so called legislature any credibility at all is pretty deplorable. How can you say that you're in favour of Hong Kong people running Hong Kong, and democratic development in Hong Kong, if you're prepared to go along with the dismantling of a body to which you've been yourself elected in a legitimate election.

But let's put those very important principles on one side. Those who have agreed to help close down Hong Kong's elected legislature can at least prevent the trashing of Hong Kong's civil liberties. Many of them actually voted for our Bill of Rights, for the Societies Ordinance, for the Public Order Ordinance and so on. They voted for those measures and they spoke out in favour of them. Have they all changed their mind?

Having argued, for example, that the Bill of Rights was entirely consistent with the Basic Law, have they been converted to some other point of view? Having made mincemeat of the suggestion that the Bill of Rights somehow claimed pre-eminence over the Basic Law, have they now done a U-turn? Having argued with eloquence and passion that the Bill of Rights was an important building block in Hong Kong's defence of its civilised values, are they now going to allow that building block to be turned to sand?

In justifying their decision to join the provisional legislature they very often talk about the importance of facing up to reality. Which is a bit like saying that because 'flu is a reality you should spend most winters trying to catch it. But where's the reality in the argument about Hong Kong's human rights. The reality is that our human rights protection is fundamental to our way of life, and that way of life is fundamental to our economic success. It seems to me that it's a reality which is worth defending.

What are some of the consequences of the Sub-Group's recommendations? One pretty obvious consequence is that the early months of the SAR Government will be dominated by legal arguments and courtroom battles. I should have thought that Hong Kong needs that like a hole in the head. People often say that we should have less politics in Hong Kong. I don't happen to think that the politics we have already is particularly extreme or immoderate, to put it mildly. But forget that for a moment. What is plain as a pikestaff is that if you start trying to curtail people's liberties in Hong Kong you really will start to politicise everything. You rapidly start to turn the Hong Kong Government from a light touch administration to a heavy-handed one. And do you really think that if we ban the use of loudhailers in demonstrations - that's one of the consequences of messing about with these laws - Hong Kong would become overnight a safer and more stable society? What sort of a place do these people think Hong Kong is today?

It is one of the most moderate, stable and reasonable societies on the planet. You only have to spend a few days in Hong Kong to see that - or to watch the evening news and compare what happens here with events elsewhere in the world. Has that stability and moderation been enhanced or undermined since the Bill of Rights was enacted in 1991 and amendments made to some of our laws - such as the Public Order Ordinance - to bring them into line with it? You know the answer to that question, and so does the rest of the world. Let me be more specific. There has been an increase in the number of public meetings and processions over the last decade. But this doesn't seem to have affected our economy which has doubled in size, or our crime levels which have fallen. And, of course, the overwhelming majority - the overwhelming majority - were held in an orderly and peaceful manner. Last year out of the 175 demonstrations held outside the New China News Agency in Happy Valley, there wasn't a single arrest and not one prosecution. Not, in my view, proof of a society where public order is in jeopardy or individual rights ride rough shod over the good of the community at large. Further evidence of the maturity and sophistication of this community, this community which cherishes its freedoms and recognises the link between those political freedoms and its economic success. To those who insist we need to turn the clock back, to walk back in time and reinstate laws that are obsolete, at odds with our international commitments, and fly in the face of the way this society operates today, I say why? Why is this necessary? Where is the operational need? And if, as we are told, those steps are minor, then why take them if they generate, as they certainly appear to do, considerable unease and hostility within our community - not to mention - a pretty poor press for Hong Kong overseas?

Let's just look for a moment at the case which is being made for these changes. It begins with the proposition that the existing laws on civil liberties are somehow against the Basic Law. What is missing is any serious explanation of exactly where these infringements are to be found. Why? Because - not just in my opinion, but in the opinion of virtually the entire legal establishment in Hong Kong including the Bar Association, the Law Society and even some members of the National People's Congress, the Preparatory Committee and the Provisional Legislature - the laws concerned are actually, in their current forms, entirely consistent with the Basic Law.

But what if one of our laws is inconsistent with the Basic Law? What should be done about such a clash? It would obviously be pretty important to show that any adjustment proposed was itself justifiable in terms of the Basic Law. But in the case of these ordinances, that is patently not the case. The suggestion is that we put back on to the statute book laws which have clearly been shown to contravene not only the Bill of Rights but also the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, which is itself solemnly and fully enshrined in Article 39 of the Basic Law.

The Basic Law is not just a handy anthology of debating points. It is the fundamental constitutional document of the Hong Kong Special Administrative Region. It is the standard against which the community and the world will judge whether one country two systems means what it says - whether tomorrow's Hong Kong, like today's, really will be a free and open society. In any debate about changes to the law, the community has a right to expect a full legal analysis to justify any change which is being proposed. Anything less, not only does a disservice to the people of Hong Kong. It also devalues the Basic Law itself.

Let me make one other thing plain. This is not - and must not be seen as - a matter of personalities, as some may be tempted to see it. It is far too important for that. It is about principles, principles which are at the heart of Hong Kong's way of life.

In the end, Hong Kong's autonomy under the Basic Law will only work if people stand up for it. The community will make up its own mind about the effect of the changes now being proposed. But we must also remember that Hong Kong is one of the great international cities of the world. No amount of self belief in Hong Kong itself will be enough if Hong Kong's partners stop being willing to give one country two systems the benefit of the doubt. We cannot dictate to the international community what they should think: they will make up their own mind on the basis of what those taking decisions about Hong Kong's future actually say and do.

Now I daresay some people will say that we're making too much of a meal of all this. That's not the impression I get from reading the newspapers and hearing what people have to say. I think there's one very simple question which has to be addressed. Is Hong Kong going to have the same freedoms after 1997 - yes or no? If the answer to that question is yes, then why, I repeat, do we need to make all these changes? And if the answer is no, we are entitled to learn just what is going to be usurped, just how much is going to be taken away, why that's going to happen and how it squares with the international covenants and all the other promises China has made.

As I say, that's a pretty simple question. It's one that I intend continuing to ask until I get some rather more satisfactory answers. I hope that you'll ask it too.

Yearly figures on court insolvency cases released

* * * * *

There were 557 new compulsory company liquidations last year, representing less than 1.2 per cent of the total number of new companies incorporated during the year (49,730).

The corresponding figures in 1995 were 481 and 1.5 per cent.

Reviewing the work of the Official Receiver's Office in 1996, the Official Receiver, Mr Robin Hearder, said: "The number of new compulsory company liquidations in 1996 was only around 0.1 per cent of the total number of companies (483,200).

"Major causes of failure were a decline in business, cash-flow problems and poor management."

Mr Hearder also said the number of new bankruptcies increased from 455 in 1995 to 543 last year.

"The major causes of failure were inability to meet liabilities arising from personal guarantees and excessive use of personal credit facilities," he said.

He added that although the total number of new court insolvencies had increased from 936 in 1995 to 1,100 in 1996, it was low in comparison with other overseas jurisdictions in view of the huge volume of economic activities in Hong Kong.

The businesses mainly affected by compulsory company liquidations and bankruptcies included garment and knitting manufacturing, importers and exporters, restaurants and canteens, electrical and electronic manufacturing, construction and engineering, land/property development and investment, as well as transport and godowns.

Petitions were filed by the Director of Legal Aid (36 per cent), trade creditors (31 per cent), banks and financial institutions (22 per cent), landlords (4 per cent), shareholders (two per cent), personal (two per cent) and others (three per cent).

On insolvency prosecutions, there were 126 summonses as against 120 in 1995 issued against bankrupts and directors of compulsory wound-up companies for failure to submit statements of affairs to the Official Receiver, failure to keep proper books and records and misconduct.

A total of 69 bankrupts or directors as against 86 in 1995 were convicted of insolvency offences. The total amount of fines imposed by the court was $256,535 as against $524,980 in 1995. Thirty-four orders for disqualification of company directors were made by the Court in 1996. The directors concerned were prohibited from acting as directors for periods varying from one to four years.

Thirty-seven warrants of arrest were issued against uncooperative bankrupts or directors in 1996 and six warrants were implemented.

Total dividends declared by the Official Receiver during 1996 (excluding BCCHK) amounted to $62.92 million in 249 insolvencies, as against $71.7 million in 242 insolvencies in 1995.

One hundred per cent preferential payments or ordinary dividends were declared in 99 insolvencies as against 100 cases in 1995. Substantial dividends were also declared to the creditors of Vucan Co Ltd ($3.75 million), Shuen Kwok Tung trading as Hansom Engineering Co ($4.09 million) and Alan Tin Chao Lau ($3.31 million).

Survey on port back-up operations in NT being conducted

* * * * *

The Task Force Black Spots (TFB) of the Lands Department is conducting a blanket survey on existing port back-up operations in the New Territories.

"The survey, to be completed next month, is aimed at getting a proper understanding of these operations in order to help long-term planning and development," the Government Land Agent/TFB, Mr Allan Hay, said today (Sunday).

According to a report submitted to the Special Committee on Cleaning Up the New Territories, the TFB continued to make progress in cleaning up environmental black spots in the New Territories.

In the Pat Heung Pilot Action Area, the TFB had considered 158 cases covering 18.6 hectares by the end of last year.

"A total of 59 existing use (EU) undertakings covering eight hectares of land had completed the required in-situ environmental improvement works (IEIW).

"Currently, there are 212 EU undertakings on private land in the action area.

About 70 per cent of them will have completed the necessary IEIW by the end of March," said Mr Hay.

In the North District (East) Action Area, the TFB had considered 10 cases covering 2.38 hectares. Of these, two EU undertakings had completed the required IEIW.

"In addition, all government sites along either sides of three trunk roads in the area, except those falling within the sites of two road projects, had been cleared and fenced off as scheduled by the end of November last year," he said.

Turning to the Ha Tsuen and Lau Fau Shan Container Action Area, Mr Hay said the 13 EU container depots covering 34.94 hectares had all conformed to the Code of Practice (COP) and completed the IEIW according to the COP.

"The only non-conforming EU depot has finally reduced its stacking height to eight containers," Mr Hay said.

"The COP has been widely accepted by well-organised depots and the TFB is taking steps to regularise the structures of the conforming EU depots."

"Any illegal extension or addition will not be tolerated and action is in hand to check the ground situation of the depots again," he stressed.

The TFB was set up by the Lands Department in August 1994 with a commitment to deal with the proliferation of conversion of agricultural land into open storage yards and other similar uses in the New Territories prior to 1990.

It reports to a Special Committee on Cleaning up the New Territories. Chaired by Legislative Councillor, Dr Samuel Wong, the committee advises the Government on all matters relating to the environmental black spots and oversee the task force's work.

Public reminded not to steal water from fire hydrants

* * * * *

The Water Supplies Department today (Sunday) reminded the public that it was an offence to tap water from fire service installations for non-fire fighting purposes.

"The offence carries a maximum fine of $5,000 and a further fine of $200 per day for continuing offences," a spokesman for the department said.

Among a number of court cases recently, a driver and four construction workers were found guilty of using water from on-street fire hydrants for non-fire fighting purposes.

"The driver was fined $6,000 while the penalties on the four workers ranged from $4,000 to $10,000," he said.

Another case involved a cleansing company in Ngau Tau Kok which had carried out unauthorised alterations to a fire service facility and used the water for washing. The company was fined $4,000.

Also, a food caterer in San Po Kong and an employee of a seafood shop in Ngau Tau Kok were charged with illegal use of fire service water supply for cooking and washing. They were fined $1,200 and $1,500 respectively.

Applications for running induction programmes invited

* * * * *

The Education Department is inviting applications from non-profit-making voluntary agencies to run induction and extension programmes for new immigrant children from China.

The programmes are aimed at helping these children to adapt to the local environment and providing educational support, especially remedial teaching of English, for them.

A senior education officer, Miss Wong Yuk-ha, said, "Government subvention will be in the form of a block grant covering expenses for teaching staff, centre administration and basic teaching equipment."

"The induction programme is designed for immigrant children aged between six and 15 who have arrived in Hong Kong from China for less than one year.

"The extension programme provides new immigrants aged between nine and 15 with remedial teaching to improve their English," she said.

Each class will be of 60 teaching hours.

Non-profit-making voluntary agencies can now obtain application forms from the Adult Education Section, Education Department at Room 1106, 213 Queen's Road East, Wan Chai.

Application forms can also be obtained by post by sending a self-addressed envelope to the section.

All completed applications should reach the Adult Education Section not later than February 17.

Enquiries should be directed to 2892 6670 during office hours.

Induction courses were first introduced in April 1995. Since then, 812 induction courses have been run by voluntary agencies throughout the territory and more than 10,500 immigrant children have attended.

Meanwhile, 420 extension courses have been run to enable some 5,300 children to improve their English.

Family of traffic accident victim awarded $80,700

* * * * *

The Social Welfare Department (SWD) has awarded $80,700 from the Traffic Accident Victims Assistance (TAVA) Fund to the family members of a man killed in a traffic accident in Fanling last month.

The man, aged 61, was the driver of a light goods vehicle which collided with other vehicles in Fanling Highway on December 30 last year. The deceased was survived by his wife, a son and three daughters.

A spokesman for the department said today (Sunday) that the TAVA scheme was aimed at providing prompt financial assistance to traffic accident victims or their dependants, regardless of the means of a family or the fault element in the accident.

"Beneficiaries under the scheme will retain the right to make claims for legal damages or compensation from other sources in the usual way.

"However, those who receive other damages or compensation relating to the same accident are required to repay the amount of assistance already received from the TAVA scheme.

"But in any case, the amount repaid will not exceed the amount of damages or compensation awarded," the spokesman said.

Enquiries about the scheme may contact the SWD's TAVA Section at Room 942, ninth floor, Wu Chung House, 213 Queen's Road East, Wan Chai, or on 2834 7472.

Five organisations to raise funds in February

* * * * *

Five organisations have been granted permission to raise funds next month (February) for charitable purposes, a spokesman for the Social Welfare Department said today (Sunday).

They will either sell flags, tokens or similar items, or place donation boxes in designated public places.

Members of the public can call the department's hotline 2343 2255 in case of doubt.

Any organisation planning to hold activities involving collection of money or sale or exchange for donation of badges, tokens or similar articles in a public place for charitable purposes should apply for a public subscription permit from the Social Welfare Department.

The spokesman appealed to organisers to take precautions against any possible fraud.

"Sellers should display the permit or carry copies of the permit for inspection upon request if the fund-raising is mobile," he said.

The spokesman also advised them to prepare guidelines for sellers, setting out the places and the times for selling and the collection points for bags.

"Organisers should inform the Police in case of loss of property, and seek their help when fraudulent acts, such as tampering of collection bags or making unauthorised selling, are found," he added.

Permits are given to the following organisations to raise funds next month:

Vegetable growing competition winning entries on display

* * * * *

Winning entries of the Primary School Children Vegetable Growing (in pots) Competition will be displayed at Hong Kong Teachers' Centre at Pak Fuk Road, North Point on Tuesday (January 28) and Wednesday (January 29).

Organised by the Education Department in co-operation with the Agriculture and Fisheries Department, the competition is to provide school children with the learning activity to study the growth of plants. It is also aimed at enhancing their concern for the environment.

The competition was first organised for government primary schools and because of the enthusiastic response, it has now expanded to cover all primary schools in Hong Kong.

Six common vegetables which flourish in winter time were selected for this year's competition.

Prior to the competition, responsible teachers of all participating schools were invited to join a seminar on vegetable cultivation and they were encouraged to share their experiences in vegetable growing.
